At present we do know this: the beat of the music, the stench of the DDR crew, the Hdd of the DDR lights, and the lack of self centered personality disorders destroying social cohesive ness has driven the vidjots off as garlic <sup>is said to</sup> drive off vampires.

Preliminary conclusions: The lack of vidjot-asshole cultural dominance ~~has~~ in quadrant 029 has allowed the retention of several new really cool members, and promises to tip the scales in the vidjot-literacy ~~war~~ wars between quadrant 029 and 02A.

Congressional report: Threat of attack in U.S. was misread

By Thomas Frank

Washington — The first report of a congressional investigation into Sept. 11 suggests intelligence agencies did not take seriously enough the threat of a terrorist strike inside the United States despite extensive reports indicating such an attack was planned.

Digging into classified CIA and FBI files, congressional investigators unearthed numerous reports about planned domestic attacks, including one from August 1995, that Arabs were planning to fly an explosives-laden plane into the World Trade Center tower, intelligence agencies learned about an Osama bin Laden plot involving aircraft in the New York and Washington, D.C., areas. And in 1999 and 2000, there were three separate reports that bin Laden was planning an attack in New York City.

But intelligence agencies were so focused on potential overseas attacks that one FBI official told investigators there was a 98 percent probability that a terrorist strike would target a foreign U.S. facility instead of a domestic one.

"You would think with all of that . . . you would have been more aggressive. That wasn't done," Ebovator Hill, a former federal prosecutor leading the inquiry, told a congressional special panel yesterday.

The report also said that despite evidence of terrorist interests, intelligence agencies were more focused on chemical, biological, radiological and nuclear attacks because of their potential for mass casualties.

A classified report by the FBI and Federal Aviation Administration in December 2000 described the danger of terrorist hijackings. Terrorists in the United States were primarily interested in fund-raising, recruiting and disseminating propaganda, that report said, adding that FBI investigators "do not suggest evidence of plans to target domestic sites, inland.

But in the previous six years, intelligence agencies had learned of at least a dozen instances of terrorists planning — not to use airplanes as weapons, according to documents cited in the report and the U.S. intelligence director.

That information led to a 1997 report on terrorism. "Civil aviation remains a particularly attractive target in light of the fear and publicity the dressing of an FBI and stop up their

The CIA and efforts in the 1990s, anti-terrorism units devoted to creating agencies and to bin Laden. But al-Qaida was "an occupationally difficult target" to disrupt because details of terrorist plots were not widely shared within the organization, the report said.

use of reports.

A senior U.S. intelligence official said that there was no specific information base, where and when the Sept. 11 attacks were to occur.

Nevertheless, members of Congress said the disparate reports, although ineffective, might have prompted preventive measures.

Senate Intelligence Committee Staff Director Bob Graham (D-Fla.) said that the FBI could have alerted its communications that hijacked crews and passengers act passively and strategy developed when hijackers simply requested money — and money, he said, was provided.

The congressional investigation is being conducted by a special staff for the House and Senate intelligence committees, whose leaders have it will prompt reform in the intelligence agencies.

But committee leaders expressed concern that the administration was thwarting their efforts, particularly through its refusal to release any ref-erences to intelligence agencies given information to the White House or to any president.

Democratic and Republican leaders said they may challenge the White House's elimination of such information that can be withheld under executive privilege.

open court. Using a speaker phone, in front of at least six witnesses, Slansky first dialed directory information and got a number for the Postage, paid. Then, calling that number he asked the Department of Defense operator to locate the office of Lt. Robert Freeleaf. Within moments the operator had confirmed Freeleaf's posting, his rank as a Lieutenant O-3, his room number and given Slansky his direct-dial number.

All of this is a part of the court record.

On January 17, as this writer sat in the courtroom, another mind-numbing event occurred.

As Freeleaf sat shackled in a corner, closely flanked by two guards, the Crown Solicitor sought to debunk Freeleaf's assertions that he had been assigned to travel to Moscow to review and retrieve highly technical and classified documents pertaining to Russian and Chinese efforts to counter the proposed US "Star Wars" missile defense system. [Ed note: FIV believes this to be a cover story.] "Mr.," said the Crown Solicitor, "would the US choose, in a case involving some of the most highly technical intelligence, a random person with training in the tool and die field." The point that someone discharged in 1990 with no special training and rank would be sent to review technical documents sounded reasonable - assuming that Freeleaf's background was as the Solicitor argued.

The reasonableness vanished a few moments later as the Crown Solicitor argued that Freeleaf, who has been in jail and without access to a computer for thirteen months, had somehow cracked the Postage's personal records and inserted his name, an office number, and telephone extension into the Postage database.

No one except for Freeleaf and attorney Galati seemed to notice the contradiction.

The Crown Solicitor restated further through the looking glass by then arguing that Freeleaf, having certain papers in his possession at the time of his arrest, had memorized Russian and Albanian documents and then had translated them from memory. Freeleaf doesn't speak Russian or Albanian. The judge, noticing this stretch of credibility, asked the Solicitor to restate the point. The argument then became that Freeleaf had an unnamed colleague go to an unspecified web site, print Russian and Albanian documents for him, and then used foreign language dictionaries to translate them.

Freeleaf's extradition process could take years and his time in jail has not been easy. There have been threats, illnesses and his every move is watched. Galati and Slansky wonder how long his people will hold up. The history of jailhouse deaths of her witnesses looms heavily in favor of Freeleaf's belief that he could be killed at any moment. His apparent strategy is to not reveal any accurate Top Secret material to either his lawyers or the press, hoping that his attorney will provide him with some support from US clandestine services. This a standard approach taken in dozens of similar cases researched by FIV in the past. They include the cases - well known in research circles - of William Joyce and Michael Riconosciuto. Three has been jailed on a questionable murder conviction since 2009 and Riconosciuto on a variety of drug-related charges since the early 1990s. Both men have been directly connected to CIA and other intelligence operations by official documents.

"He don't need to know and we don't want to know the secret details," says Galati. "They" do not necessary for us to do the job of keeping our client alive and in Canada. He faces a special danger in the US because he has also been an informant against an organized crime family in Michigan where the original charges originate. The more he is facing there is two years but we believe he might not live for two days in that system."

Additional press reports indicate that Freeleaf's intelligence work was connected to drug smuggling - a much more likely reason for his trip to Moscow. And the history of the relations between Naval Intelligence and the Mafia is documented as far back as the Second World War when SOE officers made deals with convicted mafia don Lucky Luciano and his lieutenant Vito Genovese to protect New York docks and assist with the subsequent Allied invasion and occupation of Italy.

Who Freeland is one man who, in a rational world, could totally expose the complicity of the US government in the attacks of September 11th. He has also divulged what he writes and stuffed into that envelope is a rational world that would be the most pressing and public inquiry of all. The two questions remaining are whether Freeland will live and whether or not he will ever tell what he knows. That may be a mutually exclusive proposition.

FTW has retained the services of freelance journalist Greta Kustson in Toronto to report on developments in this critical case for our subscribers. Important updates will be posted and sent out via subscriber bulletins to our readers as they become available.

Came here about 9:30 AM, no one was here. Went online at 10 AM + still no one was here. Took a nap, woke up at 12:30 PM + lo, no one was here. Went to the mall, bought presents for family. Came back about 3 PM + once again, no one was here. Started writing this at about 5:05 PM + no one is here. Probably leaving in a while since no one is here. When did the Forum become such an uncool place to hang out on a holiday (or more specifically, the day before a holiday)? I miss the good old days... sigh!

Judge orders Verizon to name pirate

Music industry win raises privacy issues

By Jefferson Graham
USA TODAY

The recording industry, unsuccessful in its attempt to slow down online music swaggers, has been given the go-ahead to fight back. Net users directly affected by the lawsuit filed by the Recording Industry Association of America (RIAA) said last week that they thought the RIAA request, asking it to order consumers to turns subscribers in the network. The company's P.T.E. will appeal the "chilling" ruling. P.T.E. will open the door for anyone to sue an allegation of copyright infringement, and get complete access to a subscriber's information, without the protection of the court.

The RIAA was able to obtain a court order to sue down servers. Napster and other companies also can sue down servers. It is not clear if the music industry will sue to target individual users, who represent some of the most passionate music consumers.

Downloaded files have passed over more than 100 million people have downloaded to their computers. The RIAA says it is not clear how many people have downloaded to their computers.

is showing new interest in tracking down those who trade. The WhereHaveMusic.com site has the most downloads at all listed for Napster. It has a large number of users and their IP addresses. The music world says yes, Napster copyright attorney E. Leonard Bybee agrees. There never was a trial in the Napster case, but in a bunch of opinions, the court expressed that the defendant was committing copyright infringement.

For now, the aim of the record industry seems less high, content than internet. RIAA President Cary Sherman said in a statement that with the court order, "We look forward to contacting the account holder (to) let them know that what they are doing is illegal."

The RIAA wouldn't discuss whether it plans to contact more users. Rubin predicts they will. They want to scare people - absolutely, he says. "Otherwise they're going to show all of this to the public where it de-stroys the record business."

Fred von Lubowitz says computers have been going to court for years to find people who have allegedly downloaded them on bulletin boards and in chat rooms. But until now, the service provider hasn't had to comply unless there was a court order and proof.

This ruling has copyright holders demanded identification "right" from providers. Copyright owners should have to follow the same rules everyone else does before you can compromise the anonymity of an Internet user.

Syosset Stocks— Nuclear Antidote

By Karla Schuster
staff writer

Along with hiring teachers and buying textbooks, the Syosset school district added a new item to its list of back-to-school preparations this year—stockpiling antidotes for a nuclear disaster.

Looking to improve their emergency management plan, district officials this summer bought about 8,000 potassium iodide pills, which can protect against thyroid cancer in event of exposure to radiation.

Several school districts in Westchester, Connecticut and New Jersey located near nuclear plants have acquired potassium iodide in the past year, but Syosset appears to be the first on Long Island to stock it.

Potassium iodide is available without a prescription in some pharmacies, and the recommended 14-day course can be purchased for about $10. It works by flooding the thyroid with safe iodine, thus preventing radioactive iodine in the air, food, milk and water from being absorbed.

"We keep sleeping bags on hand. We keep blankets on hand. We keep all sorts of supplies on hand and this is no different," said Rendi Sachs, spokeswoman for the Syosset schools. "We really don't think we're going to have to use it, and we know we're not real close to a reactor, but we'd hate to have someone say, 'We told you so.'"

Potassium iodide has been on the market for years, but was largely unknown to the general public until the 9/11 terrorist attacks, which put a new spotlight on the medication and renewed debate about widespread government distribution of the pills.

Since then, the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission, which has stockpiled the pills for years, began offering them to states where there are nuclear reactors. The 16 states that requested the pills, including New York, have so far limited free public distribution to citizens within a 10-mile radius of a reactor. But the American Thyroid Association, saying it's unclear how far nuclear fallout would spread, endorses the distribution of potassium iodide to all residents living within a 50-mile radius of a nuclear plant.

But some area school officials wonder if the zeal for disaster preparedness has gone too far.

"It's a little bit too 'War of the Worlds' for us," said Flainedge Superintendent John Richman. "I don't know if administering drugs in that way to kids is within the purview of a school district.

Syosset school officials say that the pills cost the district a little more than $3,000 and that parents were notified of the intention to administer the pills to their children and offered the chance to opt out.

The supply of 130-milligram pills is enough for every student and staffer in Syosset schools to get the first dose of the recommended 14-day course of medication for maximum protection against radiation exposure. After that, parents would have to supply the pills on their own.

"I'm not really sure how I feel about it," said Jackie Veder of Woodbury, parent of three students in Syosset. "The district might be over-reacting, but maybe that isn't necessarily such a bad thing."

JC here. First post since last millennium. Would like to Thank anybody who helped out during the last I-CON.
I had the great honour of being allowed to assist in the break down (cleaning up) process on Sunday Evening and, despite the strenuous table hauling involved, it was loads of fun interacting with everybody.

For those who haven't seen me in a while, I've changed a bit in the last couple years. I lost around fifty or sixty pounds, and I've been spending a decent amount of my time working out. If luck holds, I may be able to walk around half-naked on beaches without fear of incurring laughter or disgust by the beginning of summer. Woo!

I've learned how to code a little. I made a reasonable approximation of Tetris last week, and I've been designing and implementing various administrative gui apps for my workplace. It's a lot of fun to finally be successfully self-educated. ☺

Hmmm... If anybody hears of any place looking for a skilled (albeit absentminded) computer administrator or programmer, feel free to send me an email (mailto:willbrok@n-fad@jc-news.com) and let me know. I'm eager to break free of my sub-125000 career path, and a new job would give me an excellent excuse to finally move out of my parents' home.

That is all. End communication.

ITS AN OFFICIAL LANGUAGE!!!

Wanted: Interpreters of Klingon

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Portland, Ore. — Position Available: Interpreter, must be fluent in Klingon.

The language created for the "Star Trek" TV series and movies is one of about 50 needed by the office that treats mental health patients in metropolitan Multnomah County.

"We have to provide information in all the languages our clients speak," said Jerry Selanich of the county Department of Human Services, which serves about 60,000 mental health clients.

Although created for a TV show, Klingon has a consistent grammar, syntax and vocabulary.

And now Multnomah County research has found that many people — not just fans — consider it a complete language.

"There are some cases where we've had mental health patients where this was all they would speak," said the county's purchasing administrator, Franca Hathaway.

Officials said that obligates them to hire a Klingon-English interpreter, putting the language on a par with common languages such as Russian and Vietnamese, and less common tongues including Dari and Tongan.

Rain

How strange it is to see the reflection of rain all night.

I wish I was not by my own self.

I watch the rain outside my window, thinking of you.

We could be side by side, in quiet.
Watching the same scene.

The loneliness of the moment impels you to kiss me.

My mind says that you're nothing more than a man.

Do I trust my own heart to give you a chance?

But, why do I feel that your kiss could set me free?

Free me, from my torture.

Free me, from my world.

Free me, to be in a place we call our own.

(cont'd =>)

Would one small kiss from you give me eternal happiness?
Would one kiss mean that you would love me 'til death?
Would just one kiss, I would miss, because it was a goodbye?

Is this the only measure which one is to tell love by?

I wish it were other. A heavenly kiss is my desire.

And, I thought about you tonight,
... as I watched the rain.

Falling Star

As I watched the night sky with someone I knew I saw a falling star.

I then asked myself what I could wish for.

My instant response was freedom, for it to take me far away... to a place I truly belonged.

Then, I looked over and saw my friend.
Someone who I truly would like to spend forever with because this is the only person I could ever love.

If I chose my friend over freedom,
I would forever be unhappy.

But, I would know that there will always be someone by me; behind me...
The pain would be extreme, but your soul could notice that all vanish with a simple smile.

My friend, ... the only person who accepts me for who I am.

The sacrifice might be worth the understanding between our souls.

If I chose my freedom, I would be happy.

There would be a place where I forever belonged.

There would be a place in the world where everyone will tolerate me.

But, my heart would be lonely knowing that you existed for me.

My heart would break, for I would not find a love that would even remotely compare to yours.

To forever be with you or to forever dream of you?

Would you see me as a fool for wanting to stay with you?

Would you shun me for wanting a world that you have no power to give?

A hand on my shoulder; my friend smiled at me.

Oh falling star... this is what I wish. ....

Paris was not the only city to explode in 1968. Student protest broke out in West Berlin, targeting the government's close ties to the autocratic shah of Iran and the power of media corporations. In Italy, undergraduates staged a lengthy series of demonstrations to draw attention to university overcrowding. In Mexico City a confrontation with the police ended with the death of hundreds of protesters, most of them students—on the

Digital diary in works at the Pentagon

The Pentagon is seeking bids on a contract to develop LifeLog, a multimedia, digital diary that would be a record of everywhere a person goes and everything the person sees, hears, reads, says and touches. The goal is to create software that helps analyze behavior, habits and routines, according to Pentagon documents reviewed by the Associated Press. The data would be used to help understand how people learn and then to tailor military training accordingly.

LifeLog would capture a person's "experience in and interactions with the world" through a camera, microphone and sensors worn by the user. Everything from heartbeats to travel to Internet chatting would be recorded. A user would have to consent to be monitored. The products of the unclassified project would be available to both the private sector and other government agencies.

But John Pike of GlobalSecurity.org, a defense analysis group, doubts it would help the military. He is concerned about possible violations of privacy.

Three church groups unite to register voters for 2004

Three conservative religious organizations have teamed up for a church-based voter-registration drive ahead of the 2004 presidential and congressional elections.

The Christian Coalition, the National Pro-Life Religious Council and Priests for Life, a Catholic group that opposes abortion, will target millions of Christians on four "National Christian Voter Registration Sundays" between now and the election in November 2004.

Roberta Comb of the Christian Coalition said that of the 50 million registered voters who call themselves born-again, evangelical or Bible-believing Christians, only 15 million voted in the 2000 election.

The groups say the registration drives are non-partisan and seek to get Christians who are not politically active to play a larger role in shaping public policy.

However, the Rev. Barry Lynn, executive director of Americans United for Separation of Church and State, criticized the move as a step toward creating a church-based political machine.

Bacteria Stand Pressure

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Certain bacteria survived under almost a quarter-million pounds of pressure in an environment that suggests microbes may live in extreme environments on Earth and in the solar system where life was thought impossible, researchers say.

In a study appearing today in the journal Science, scientists at the Carnegie Institution in Washington, D.C., report that when they squeezed bacteria between the jaws of a diamond anvil at up to 17,000 atmospheres of pressure, some of the microbes survived. The first organisms that survived contained bacteria called Deinococcus that survive, and Acetivibrio, the first author of the study.

Since these microbes could adapt to such extreme pressures, this suggests that when we look for life in places beyond the Earth, we have to look beyond the surface," said Sharma. "The habitable zone is now expanded." Dr. Kenneth Woelen, a geobiologist at the University of Southern California and a researcher at NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory, said the implications of the study make the "rocked dry rocks of." "When you squeeze them, the organisms need protection at pressures equivalent to what you would find in the interior of the Earth, if not in the interior of the Moon." "It has very interesting implications for the potential of life in places like Jupiter and other large planets where the gravity is so immense."

In the study, Sharma, biologist James Scott, and their colleagues used a diamond anvil to test the resistance of two extreme microbes, E. coli, found in the human intestinal system, and Shewanella outsidealis, ordinary bacteria that live in rock beneath the waters of Ontario Lake near Syracuse.

The anvil is a device that squeezes two gem-quality diamonds against each other at very high pressures. Sharma said chemical tests showed about 1 percent of the 1 million bacteria squeezed in the anvil survived.

THIS DATE IN HISTORY

On this date: In 1772, the first U.S. president, George Washington, was born at his parents' plantation in the Virginia colony.

In 1879, Frank Winfield Woolworth opened a five-cent store in Utica, N.Y.

In 1921, Calvin Coolidge delivered the first presidential radio broadcast from the White House. In 1922, it became illegal for airplanes to fly over the White House.

In 1980, the U.S. Olympic hockey team upset the Soviets at Lake Placid, N.Y., 4-3. (The U.S. team went on to win the gold.)

In 2001, President George W. Bush held his first full-fledged presidential news conference, which he defended the tax-cutting and budget plans.

I like this response.
I do.

Oh, cut the "moron squad" crap. By using that type of terminology you are basically insulting everyone who has worked to improve the forum since I came down, and have been largely successful. Merely because someone does not want the latest crap you want down here (cont, next)

Isn't it nice that everyone in the forum is getting together in what we call dating. And everyone constantly get into hot and heavy makeout sessions. But when you're single, it sucks. Everyone seems to be happy and making out, but a lot of them really need a room, seriously. The forum is not fun anymore. Everyone's either making out with their girlfriends or hiding in the forum down. Right now being single in the forum sucks. Then most people are trying to get together with real people that they bring down to the forum. Does this mean that whatever forum guys are ~~left~~ left and single, are not interested in the girls left in the forum, that

That just means you need to be cruel way people who are really interested in the forum instead of hanging out, the girls. Fornicating, and sleeping with copy, and wanting to see the man. Give the man some time to re-gets things. MMS

MMS of the guys are back to a 4th wheel are more in forested on line. Have changed.

are single, if any? By the end of the semester everyone will be together and the forum will disappear. All probably still be single.

You all probably stopped reading this by now, it being illegible and no one caring. No one cares about what I have to say, which is why no one will be reading this. But me ranting about this in log, no one would guess who I am, but I guess from what I had <sup>have written</sup> wrote so far someone will know who I am. But then you're probably thinking that I'm jealous or something. No, I'm happy for all of my friends, I can assure you, but ~~everyone~~ does everyone need to see boormites

we care

I don't remember you or has long - so like hold get to the point of literally having sex in the forum everytime they're here? I tell you one thing, it makes the new people uncomfortable.

So maybe not everyone will be hooked up by the end of the semester.
Why? If the people who're having sex in the forum keep doing so while "new people" are in the forum, the "new people" will leave and all of us single guys in the forum will forever stay single.

How about the vicarious thrill thing?

Well, I shouldn't say 'forever', but maybe it's just ~~it's~~ me who will forever single. I'll ~~forever be~~ always try to set my friends up, but not even one of my friends, even my BEST friends had never tried to set me up.

Maybe your friends are lame.

Have you taken the initiative?
Have you asked anyone out?

I guess no one likes me enough to ask me out, or date me, or even hook me up with anyone.
I guess that means I'm not that well liked here. I mean overall not well liked.

I guess I'll go now
because no one cares.
And if someone did read this, took the ~~the~~ TLM to read this, then I thank you.

Now, I'll go off

I will have to go with 'person B' and agree you must be a new one to have this point of view... I think you may be a freshman as well, or maybe just not used to a 'sexual environment' of any type... Sure, ~~for~~ ~~um~~ ~~forums~~ ~~have~~ ~~perverted~~ ~~minds~~ (~~take~~ ~~dusts~~ ~~off~~ ~~hats~~ ~~and~~ ~~replaces~~ ~~back~~ ~~on~~ ~~horns~~) but for the ~~any~~ majority of these couples the only time they get to spend time together is in the forum... And it's not always people making out down here, and I've never actually ~~seen~~ people have sex down here either, would much rather be part of it, IMHO...

All that aside, there are great things about the forum (social + what not) and there are some not so good things... I hated how I didn't really fit in when I came down, but that was my own ish (iswar) to work out, and I did... So, um... yeah, just take this 'flaw' with a grain of salt + work through it... maybe you haven't been down
